

You promptly take leave of Klein, hail a cab, and head for the airport. It will be dark when you reach Halifax. You'll have to stay overnight in a hotel, rent a car, and head out to the farmhouse in the morning.

While waiting for your plane, you learn that a storm is expected. High winds and six- to eight-foot waves are predicted for the next couple of days—too rough for Roundhills to put to sea. You'll have time to close in on him.
