

You just can't seem to make much progress in your investigation. The president is unavailable, so you report back to Olshen.

"I guess you're better out in the field where the action is," he says. "Well, here's an assignment you may like! A well-known computer expert named Ben Ivanko owns a brownstone house on West 73rd Street in New York City. Some of his employees live and work in the house. They have very sophisticated radio and computer equipment that seems to consume a great deal of electricity. We can't be sure, but we think Ben Ivanko is Double-Eye. He may have a copy of the whaling tape. I want you to get inside that
