

You and Carini retreat to the Ferrari. The dogs hesitate at first, stunned by the ultrasonic blasts. Then they charge the car, barking and growling angrily in frustration.

"We can turn this to our advantage," Carini says. "I'll drive away slowly. The dogs will follow. The agents will start down the road, wondering where their dogs are going. You go in the house, free DeMont, and lead him south along the beach, and I'll pick you up about a mile down the beach."

---

*If you agree to this plan,
turn to page 57.*

*If instead you insist upon going into town and calling Obbard for instructions,
turn to page 58.*